Different Types of Consumer Goods

Posted by

RP

Roman Pearce Marketing Manager

Convenience goods are those that are consumed regularly and are readily available for purchase. They are often nondurable and low-priced items. Examples of convenience goods include candy bars and tobacco products. Shopping goods are bought less frequently. They are more durable and usually more expensive than convenience goods. Examples include furniture and televisions.

Specialty consumer goods are relatively rare and are often considered luxury purchases. They are usually marketed by brand and geared to a niche market of affluent consumers. Sports cars and fine art are examples.
